Both scalar symbolic differentiation and graph accumulation use a constant number of elementary operations. Common-subexpression reuse avoids repeated logarithm and sine evaluations. No asymptotic speedup is claimed for this one-input, one-output graph; the measured comparison treats it as a correctness control.