The state counts are five, three and three. They are minimal: differing exact counts are separated by a suffix supplying the missing b symbols, and differing modular residues are separated by a suffix completing one residue to zero. Recognition uses exactly one transition per character and $O(1)$ state memory. Computing both integer counts and subtracting is unnecessary storage for the modular tasks; standard remainder automata already attain the bound.