Comparative cost and preferred method

The PDS decision takes a two-point test; the NDS conclusion requires a universal representation. A finite eigensolver can supply a counterexample but cannot establish the all-samples NDS theorem. The mixture proof improves verification scope, not the cost of evaluating one distance.