Comparative cost and preferred method

The norm bound certifies all perturbations of a declared size without refitting each one. It is a verification benefit; computing an exact spectral norm can itself be costly. A known perturbation-norm bound or a low-rank factor is required for a practical reduction. The sign correction is essential even though the norm inequality is unaffected by it.